

2019-2020 Humanities Center Brown Bag Series

Theoretical Frameworks Subsets of Conflicts, Implications and Opportunities

Social justice activism and social movements involve various concepts of theoretical frameworks and critical analysis in the field of social justice. Theoretical implications and strategies such as collective action, collective identity, resource mobilization, collective behavior and subsets of master frames along with collective action frames within social movements will be emphasized along with nuanced baseline foundations of interconnected conflicts. Acts of violence and civil unrest will be examined with open-minded perspectives and underpinnings advancing peaceful and just human relationships and how it relates to social justice activism whether it be individually and/or collectively.

FREE AND OPEN
TO THE PUBLIC

WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY

Wednesday, February 19, 2020

12:30PM—1:30PM

Rm. 2339

Faculty Administration Building

Barbara L. Jones, MA
Community Dispute Resolution
Specialist/Faculty Instructor
Center For Peace and Conflict
Studies

Barbara L. Jones is a lifelong Detroit, community activist, organizer and youth-violence prevention advocate and gun violence victim survivor who specializes in various leadership roles as a trainer/facilitator in conflict and dispute resolution, alternative dispute resolution, restorative justice and victim/offender reconciliation dialogues on campus and within the community. She serves as the Community Dispute Resolution Specialist and Faculty Instructor for the Center for Peace and Conflict Studies Program at Wayne State University. Barbara teaches a Special Topics class called “Social Justice Activism” with the Center for Peace and Conflict Studies.